City municipality Ptuj

Ptuj is the oldest city in Slovenia (Roman: Poetovio, first mentioned in written sources in 69 AD). Ptuj, an architectural chronicle situated at the crossing of roads connecting sunny Italy with the vastness of the Pannonian plain and Alpine valleys with the expanse of the Balkans, as well as its surroundings, have been settled almost without interruption since the Late Stone Age. A strategically important settlement in terms of economy and transport developed at the river crossing of the amber road which played a significant role in politics and administration, in arts and culture.

The city developed into one of the most significant trade centres in the central Europe. The entire town centre is protected as monument. Indeed, almost every building and every monument in the town reveals stories of the “treasures of millennia”.
